Vishinsky was certain to demand priority for his year-old peace proposal item — a peace pact among the Big Five and prohibition of atom weapons to avoid the threat of a new war.

He also had complaints of U. S. aggression against Formosa to argue for, nationalist Chinese complaints of Russian aggression and Balkan unrest verdicts to argue against.

her husband is all clad.

And what's nagging except the result of a woman having so few outside interests that she has nothing to think about but managing her family and seeing that it does exactly as she wants it to do? She has nothing to divert her mind from some mistake her husband made twenty years ago, or from Johnny's diet and Mary's dates, so she hounds them about them until they flee from home to get away from the sound of her voice.

One of the tragic figures in life is the middle-aged woman whose children have grown up, got married, and gone about the business of life for themselves. Generally she has been so absorbed in her children that she has lost all touch with her husband and there is no companionship between them. She has no interests of her own. No friends. No occupation when her job of raising a family is over. And she is the loneliest and most forlorn of all creatures.

Often such women, who have lived their children's lives so completely that they have no lives of their own, break up their homes and go to live with their children, where they invariably make trouble, the moral of all of which is that every woman should cultivate as many outside interests as possible. It is good for her own soul and for her husband's and her children's.

A FEW days later there was a minor push at the office. A campaign for one of the six clients whom Reagan had designated as "safe" needed changing. Edie, with Reagan, Stoneham and Pat Vernon, worked until 9:30 at night. By then they had what they wanted and the campaign, in advertising parlance, was "put to bed."

"I'll take you home, if you like," Reagan offered. "My car's outside."

"Won't it be out of your way, Dan?" Edie said.

"Nope. Right on it."

But when they got into the car Reagan said, "Are you in a hurry to get home?"

"Not especially," Edie leaned back against the cushions and let the breeze fan her face. It was a fine cool night. Above the canyon of Fifth Avenue the sky was sprinkled with stars.

"Then let's ride," Reagan said. They turned into Central Park at Fifty-Ninth Street and presently crossed the George Washington Bridge. The Hudson was like a long platinum thread dropped from the work basket of a giantess. On the other side of the bridge, Reagan turned north on Highway 9W. He stepped on it.

"This ought to get the cobwebs out of our heads," he said.

"Or get us into a Jersey jail. Do you know you're doing 65, Mr. Reagan?"

Reagan slowed down. "I'll bet even a Jersey jail wouldn't bother Dan . . ."

DOROTHY DIX Wives and Mothers

The ideal wife of tradition has always been the woman who, like the snail, carries her house on her back. Even today the most appropriate epithet you can apply to a married woman is to call her a gadabout.

Somehow the belief has always persisted that there is some peculiar virtue in a wife and mother being so altogether wifely and motherly that she acquires furman, and that having no interest outside of the four walls of her home. Nothing is more common than to hear people speak approvingly of Mrs. So and So being such a hombody that she never goes anywhere or does anything except look after her family. And for women to boast that since they have married they have given up all the clubs they used to belong to; that they have dropped out of their old social set and never go to parties; that they never read anything anymore except the baby book and the cooking recipes in the newspapers.

Wife's Job

Of course, inasmuch as keeping the home fires burning and making her family comfortable is the woman's part in the domestic partnership, it is obvious that she must necessarily give most of her time and attention to her job. But the theory that she must let this absorb her to the exclusion of everything else, that she must have no interest outside of her home no individual life of her own outside of her husband's and children's is false and misleading propaganda that is responsible for half of women's faults and has wrecked innumerable women's lives.

The chief trouble with women is that they have not enough interest in life, and that is what makes them wear the few that they have threadbare. They haven't enough things to think about and that keeps their minds in a rut. They haven't enough things to amuse and divert them and that makes them melancholy and lachrymose.

Consider how many of the weaknesses of the feminine character are attributable solely to women's lack of outside interests. Their lack of philosophy. Their inability to take it. Their passion for making mountains out of molehills. Their threshing over of old straw.

One-Man Rebel Reunion Comes to a Close

Biloxi, Miss., September 30—The one-man reunion of the United Confederate veterans is over but this old city still retains the flavor of ante-bellum days.

The reunion closed last night with Gen. James W. Moore, 98, of Selma, Ala., commander in chief of the UCV, sitting on the sidelines while the Sons of other Confederate Veterans danced gaily with their wives.

"Even if I can't dance, I like to watch the pretty girls," said Gen. Moore, the only one of 20 surviving Confederate veterans to attend the reunion.

Far from being discouraged by the absence of his comrades in arms, the sprightly old man announced plans for a 1951 convention at Norfolk, Va. The date, he said, will be set later but definitely there will be a 1951 convention — the last for the boys in gray.

J. Belmont Dennis, 58-year-old Covington, Ga., newspaper publisher and radio station owner, was re-elected commander-in-chief of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. Division commanders re-elected were J. Milton Bailly, Penland, N. C., army of North Virginia department; Gen. John J. Lively, Chattanooga, Tenn., army of Tennessee department; and Neil Bohlinger, Little Rock, Ark., army of Trans-Mississippi department.

Fred P. Myers, Washington, D.C., was elected historian and H. Norton Mason, Jr., Richmond, Va., was re-elected adjutant-in-chief.
